

"Are you," a postcard asks me, "in favor of the United Nations being empowered with authority, and backed by an international police, to make it a crime punishable by death or imprisonment for anyone to advocate war or preparation for war?"

No I am not in favor of that proposition. I am getting fed up with people who, like Henry Wallace, run around the country asking rhetorical questions that seem to allow of but one answer—and I am hardly enough to say what I think about folks who use mere cleverness with words to cover up their fundamental stupidity.

My postcard comes from Jenkins, Minn.—but you could label it Lunatic Fringe Postoffice and be just as truthful.

The card claims to have been issued by the World Peace Association, which, it asserts, not a fanatical bunch of puff-blowing molly-coddlers as some opponents of peace societies might try to make the public believe, but an organization composed of thoughtful, intelligent, red-blooded men and women of high moral character.

But I am a very low and suspicious fellow, with a prodigious memory—and I seem to recollect we listened to junk like this before World War I and World War II, dismissed the infantry, scrapped unfinished battleships, grounded the Air Force—and promptly got into war with two strikes already called on us.

Let's bring these Jenkins (Minn.) high-binders down to earth with a couple of rough facts:

We had a fast double-cross from Russia that forced the United States last night to abandon the partition of Palestine between Jews and Arabs.

From the very beginning it looked like war with the Arabs promising to attack the Jews if we or the United Nations intervened—but we were willing to risk this much of a conflict.

When it developed that the reason Russia was willing to go along with partition was that it would give her an excuse to send Red soldiers into the Near East.

There's important oil in Arab hands in the Near East—and oil and soldiers frequently spell world war.

So America reversed her UN stand for partition, checked Palestine up to a UN trusteeship; and now we're busy back home bolstering our military strength in a chess where words don't count.

And in the middle of this I get a postcard from Jenkins, Minn., asking the answers to peace and war—address, Jenkins, Minn.

Nobody Needs a Crying Towel

For Steel's "Sad" Tale of Woe

By JAMES THRASHER

It is doubtful that many hearts were wrung by the sad tale which Benjamin F. Fairless, president of United States Steel, told the Senate House Economic Committee in defending the recent rise in steel prices.

His company lost $1,000,000 on its sale of unfinished steel products in January, Mr. Fairless said. He admitted that U. S. Steel made a 1947 profit of $127,000,000. (Senator Taft said it was $150,000,000.) But it wasn't "sound business or good economics" to take a loss on anything.

Mr. Fairless said the inflationary pressure of this increase, which will add some $68,000,000 to the cost of the unfinished products, has been "grossly exaggerated." But he believes a wage increase in his industry would only result in further inflation and distress for many of our people.

(An 8-cent-an-hour increase for 400,000 steel workers, figured on a basis of a 40-hour week and $2.60 an hour, would amount to $68,000,000. But Mr. Fairless couldn't very well call that inflationary if $1,000,000 isn't.)

"U. S. Steel is a victim of inflation," said its president. "The cause of it is the U. S. Steel declared an extra dividend in December." "U. S. Steel cannot fairly be made the scapegoat for the nation's ills," he insisted.

For this, we assume the defense "on public grounds as well as for business reasons" that Senator Fairless said the steel industry should make. But it is a little hard for the public to understand.

A few of the steel industry's know-how of the steel industry's mechanical and accounting operations. But many of us know of businesses that do not make a profit every month on every item, yet are satisfied if the year is profitable.

But Mr. Fairless isn't so easily satisfied. He told the committee that "there should be neither wage increases nor price increases at the time of the steel industry. It is more important that 'business' should be conducted on a sound economic basis and at a profit."

We don't quarrel with that statement, but we do with the definition. To Mr. Fairless sound business apparently means raising prices, no matter what the effect. And profit isn't just ending the year with $150,000,000 more than you spent. It is a matter of principle and bookkeeping.

This country is in the midst of a mild but thoroughly unpleasant inflation. It is hard for people to operate on a "sound economic basis." Most of them can't remedy matters by raising the price of their labor. They can only hope for a reduction in their expenses.

So they aren't likely to appreciate any sort of added expense—especially in a basic item like steel. They are even less likely to reach for the crying towel when they hear an explanation that boils down to the fact that the rich steel industry is making more money—and the public be damned.

Only custom and hypocrisy have made the living room more important than the bedroom. When the moon flies to night clubs and bars? Because there is nothing dumber than sitting at home in a chair. A chair is only a compromise for people who pretend they are too ambitious to lie down but are still too lazy to stand on their own feet.

Sitting is an unnatural posture. I believe the home would again gain its popularity if they moved the bedroom into the living room and scattered more beds and couches around. We should take a tip from the Japanese and make guests put their shoes at the door. Every body has more fun with his shoes off.

If I were designing a home the bedroom would be a huge central chamber with a kitchen and bathroom. The largest bedroom—would be by the window and high enough to look out. It would be made like a hospital bed so that you could crank yourself up and lie comfortably. Why a dining table at all? There would be a huge self-heating fireplace operated by a button in a panel at the head of the bed.

This panel switchboard would also operate all the lights. Within arm's reach would be a small refrigerator, food and utensil cupboard and an electric hot plate. This would make it unnecessary to get up for breakfast.

All mail would be put in a box by the postman and swung in the window on a metal movable arm. There would be no point in going to the door to get the afternoon paper. A radio and a radio-phonograph would be at hand. There would be a telephone at the bedside, but it wouldn't ring. It would only turn on a light. If I didn't want to answer it, I'd turn off the light. On one wall I'd hang a dart board. The darts would have silk threads on them. I could pull them back and throw them without ever leaving bed.

That's the kind of a house I want. When somebody starts building them, I'll stand in line to live in one. I already have the beds.

GOP's Gain Aid in Drive to Cut Income Taxes

Washington, March 20 — (AP) — Senate Republicans gained new recruits today in their drive to cut income taxes $4,800,000,000.

Announcement by Senator Morse (I-Ore) that he intends to vote for the bill left little doubt the Republicans would line up solidly for it. And more Democrats pledged their support when the showdown comes Monday.

The Senate agreed last night to vote on any remaining amendments and the bill itself starting at 5 p. m. (EST) Monday.

This agreement was reached after Republican leaders had spent nearly seven hours successfully fighting off a series of Democratic proposals to amend the bill.

Morse's decision was considered significant. He was one of the two Republicans who last year voted against the second GOP tax cut bill which President Truman vetoed. And he also voted to sustain the veto.

However, the Oregon lawmaker told the Senate yesterday that he now favors a reduction since it seems to be "the predominant will of the American people."

Senator George (Ga.), ranking Democrat on the Finance Committee, told the Senate he feels "a very definite moral obligation" to vote for a tax cut.

And Senator Byrd (Va.) took the same position.

But Senator Connally (D-Tex.) told a reporter he will vote against the bill and to sustain a veto. He said a reduction now can be justified in view of the possibility that extra billions may be required for military preparedness.

The House already has passed a bill to cut taxes $6,500,000,000. Senate GOP leaders have said privately they have assurances the House will accept the Senate $4,800,000,000 version when the two measures go to conference next week.

Cancellor to Seek Same Office

Little Rock, March 20 — (AP) — Francis Cherry of Jonesboro, judge of the 12th Chancery District who has been frequently mentioned as a possible candidate for governor, today became a candidate for reelection to his present office.

He also signed a corrupt practices pledge, which would be delivered to the secretary of the Democratic State Committee. U. S. Change of Palestine Policy Called 'Sell-Out'

Washington, March 20 — (UP) — American abandonment of the plan to partition Palestine today brought from Congress angry cries of "betrayal" and "sell out."

It also threw the diplomatic column into a dither trying to keep track of America's recent gyrations in the field of foreign policy.

A common reaction in Congress and among foreign diplomats was that it would double the United Nations. They recalled Secretary of State George C. Marshall's own words of only a month ago to support this reluctant conclusion.

At a press conference in February, Marshall said that decisive UN action on the partition plan for Palestine was absolutely necessary for the continued effective existence of the United Nations.

Yesterday the American representative called upon the UN to abandon the partition plan which the United States itself had lobbied with high pressure salesmanship through the general assembly last fall.

No one here discounted the fact that the Palestine issue is hopelessly entangled with domestic politics. And this is a presidential election year.

Redeemed State Department officials, who have been arguing the case for partition of Palestine for months, refused to receive reporters seeking an explanation. But they were not such good actors as the "tragic spectacle" on Capitol Hill.

Presidential aspirant Sen. Robert A. Taft, R., O., branded the U. S. action a "reversal of policy" which would create only "worse confusion."

Senate President Arthur H. Vandenberg, R. Mich., and Sen. Tom Connally, D., Tex., ranking members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, were also in the Capitol.

They couldn't hide their consternation.

The western powers' decision to propose return of Trieste to Italy was attributed to two main causes:

1. Discussion in the security council have already shown that agreements on the selection of a governor (for Trieste) is impossible. The peace treaty provides that a governor for the new free territory should be chosen by the U. N. Security Council.

2. The three powers "have received abundant evidence to show that the Yugoslav zone has been completely transformed in character and has been virtually incorporated into Yugoslavia by pro-Yugoslav propaganda."

The western powers do not respect the desire expressed by the powers to give an independent and democratic status to the territory.

In the following article two Associated Press correspondents assess and analyze the two Jewish forces and the Arab Army which are in the field.

By JAMES M. LONG AND JOSEPH C. GOODWIN (For DeWitt MacKenzie)

Jerusalem, March 20 — (AP) — The Jews have started their fight for a state with two armies, one on the borderline of legality, one still outlawed, but both in battle with the Arab forces.

Haganah (it means defense) is the official militia of the Jewish agency, and potentially the future army of a Jewish state. Technically it has not been recognized by the British mandate government. But it exists and operates as a uniformed, armed fighting force, openly, unchallenged.

Irgun Zvai Leumi (it means national military organization) exists and operates just as unlegally as Haganah, but it is not recognized by the British.

Despite the unanimity of the two fighting forces in the battle against the Arabs, there are so far unresolvable differences between them in their policy of action toward the British, and lesser differences on the future expansion of the Jewish state.

Once, at the end of February, they clashed briefly in downtown Tel Aviv in a fight within the Jewish community in which 30 persons were hurt. But on the sniper and mortar fire no-man's-land line between Jewish Tel Aviv and Arab Jaffa their gunposts are side by side.

Haganah has a fulltime, paid, regular army basis striking force called Palmach now up to some 10,000 fighting strength. It is backed by a trained, partly armed militia of many thousands more.

Recruits, some taken from the militia and others hand-picked from newly arriving immigrants, are trained into Palmach at regular bases comparable to American citizen military training camps, but brief and into 180 hours. Uniforms, manual of arms and drill are basically those of the British Army.

Newsweek Prints Story of 'Guru Letters,' Which Involve Wallace in a Russian Cult

Trieste Return to Italy Asked by 3 Nations

Washington, March 20 — (AP) — United States, Britain and France today proposed the return of the territory of Trieste to Italy through a major revision of the Italian peace treaty.

The proposal to "place the free territory of Trieste once more under Italian sovereignty" apparently is a major move by the western powers in Italian political strategy. The Italians are to hold a national election April 18 with a Communist bid for power the big issue.

The western powers' decision to propose return of Trieste to Italy was attributed to two main causes:

1. Discussion in the security council have already shown that agreements on the selection of a governor (for Trieste) is impossible. The peace treaty provides that a governor for the new free territory should be chosen by the U. N. Security Council.

the pyramid... had some cabalistic significance for members of a small religious sect."

Another result of the correspondence was that Wallace became convinced that somewhere on the mysterious plains of Outer Mongolia could be found signs of the Second Coming of Christ.

Through the Roerichs, Wallace met Horch. They became close friends. Horch went to work in the Department of Agriculture, and later, when Wallace became Secretary of Commerce, Horch went to Commerce too. He remained there until recently.

Roerich is Fired: In 1934 Wallace decided to send an expedition of plant experts to Outer Mongolia and Tibet to look for drought-resistant grasses which were believed to grow there. He asked Roerich to head the expedition. Wallace's professed reason for employing Roerich was that he knew the Far East, but around the Department of Agriculture the secretary's assistants freely admitted that he also wanted Roerich to look for the signs of the Second Coming.

Roerich and the plant experts soon fell out. Among the scientists quit, reportedly because they felt that Roerich was neglecting the purpose of the expedition to conduct experiments with aphrodisiacs. Roerich demanded that another of the plant experts be recalled. When knowledge of Roerich's activities in the department's Bureau of Plant Industry, refused, Wallace fired Roerich.

Then suddenly, the Agriculture Secretary soured on Roerich. On Jan. 30, 1936, the department announced that Roerich was being terminated. Although the official announcement gave no reason for the action, newspaper reporters were told off the record that Roerich was "regarded as a spy by certain officials of Manchukuo."

The dismissal coincided with several events which Roerich's admirers felt were significant. Shortly before, Horch had broken with Roerich and fled suit to gain control of the Riverside Drive building. Shortly after, the Treasury Department accused Roerich of evasion of income taxes, a charge which had the effect of making it dangerous for him to return to New York to fight Horch's suit.

Horch won the suit, but Roerich's admirers felt that Maurice Lichtman, Mrs. Sina Lichtman, and Miss Grant, decided to appeal. Convinced that Wallace's about-face on Roerich was inspired by Horch, they sought to involve him in the case. They produced letters which they claimed Wallace had written to members of the Roerich Museum. They left the letters with two Wall Street attorneys, who later returned them to Miss Grant after deciding not to handle the case.

Late in 1937 Republican leaders and newspaper publishers began to hear whispers about Wallace's connections with Roerich. Mrs. Roerich, and a woman at the Roerich Museum known only as "Zenda," photostats of letters he wrote to the editor of the Washington Post passed from hand to hand. Whether they were photostats of the letters which had been produced during the court suit, whether they were photostats of other letters Wallace wrote, or whether they were forgeries, have never been definitely determined.

"Dear Guru": They were a jumble of mystic allusions and political pontifications, written in a jargon in which President Roosevelt was called at times "The Flaming One," and "The Wandering One," and Secretary of State Cordell Hull was "The Sour One," Churchill "The Roaring Lion," and Russia "The Tiger." Roerich was "Dear Guru," meaning spiritual leader, and Mrs. Roerich was "Modra." Some letters were written in Latin, and others were typewritten on Department of Agriculture stationery. Some were signed "H. A. Wallace," some "HAW," some "Galaxiad," and some with a symbol. Sample excerpts:

"These days of fiery trouble, we also find opportunity for doing many things. The indications of Morya through Modra have governed under the most difficult circumstances. Surrounding the one toward whom my efforts have been directed, I have been joyful in his personality but false to his ideals. 'I have been thinking of you holding the sacred, most precious casket. And I have thought of the new country going forth, to meet the seven stars under the sign of the five stars. And I have thought of the admonition: 'Await the stones.'"

"Yes, the search, whether it be for the lost word of Masonry or the Holy Chalice or the potentialities of the age to come is the one supremely worth-while in objective. The other is Karmic duty. Here is life."

Enter Block: Those who had photostats of the letters did nothing about them until late in the summer of 1940, after Roosevelt had chosen Wallace for the Vice Presidency. Then they began to play with the idea of using the letters as ammunition. The Paul Block newspapers, the Hearst newspapers, and the Scripps-Howard newspapers called in handwriting experts. Their unanimous opinion was that Wallace had unquestionably written the longhand letters. As for the others, they couldn't be sure. The signatures looked very much like Wallace's, but they couldn't agree on a final judgment.

Some newspaper attorneys raised objections. They pointed out that if Wallace had actually written the letters, they were legally his and that printing them would therefore be a violation of property rights. Paul Block went to New York, hired a suite at the Waldorf-Astoria, and invited the publishers and Republican leaders to discuss the matter with him. He brought along his star reporter, Ray Sprigle of The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, winner of a Pulitzer Prize for his disclosure that Associate Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black had once been a member of the Ku Klux Klan. Roy Howard called in Alan Heller of The New York World-Telegram. Sprigle and Keller wrote and rewrote sample stories about the letters. Finally, the two reporters were assigned to interview Wallace, then campaigning in the Midwest, on whether they were really his. By chance, Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg, New York regional director of the Social Security board, found out what was going on and rushed to Washington with the news. "Oh, God!" she moaned. "Out of a hundred million Americans, we had picked out the man for Vice President!" Harry Hopkins raged that his spy network had let him down. "Why didn't I hear about this?" he exclaimed. "Why didn't I hear about this sooner? I've got my people in every newspaper office in the country." Dramatically, Hopkins swore that he would stop at nothing to suppress the letters. "Nothing!" he repeated. Although Charles Michelson wryly remarked that he sounded like an E. Phillips Oppenheim villain, even Michelson was agitated.

Hopkins in Action: Only Roosevelt himself remained unperturbed. The story that Mrs. Rosenberg told him was that "Zenda" had the original letters from which the photostats were made and had offered them for sale. Hopkins called the President. The President roared with laughter. Then he called Wallace and chided him for "putting things in writing."

Had Wallace really written the letters? Hopkins rushed to New York to want samples of the photostats from newspaper acquaintances. In keeping with his Oppenheim mood he traveled incognito and warned his colleagues against breathing to anyone that he was there. He went to 21 and the Star Club, where a gossip columnist saw him and reported it.

Hopkins ordered assistants to study Wallace's published writings and compare them with the photostats. The report gave him the comfort. The report held that the letters sounded as though Wallace could have written them.

Hopkins called Wallace and told him under no circumstances to speak to Sprigle, then on his way West. He told Wallace aides to use force if necessary to keep Sprigle away. Then he went to see Wendell Wilkie and threatened to issue blasts against the personal lives of the Republican candidate and several Republican leaders if the letters were published.

Michelson, meanwhile, was not idle. What impressed him about the letters was that if authentic, they could be interpreted as showing that Wallace was more a pagan than a Christian. He was especially concerned about how that might affect the Catholic vote. He assigned representatives to gather statements from church leaders attesting that Wallace was a good Christian.

Sprigle caught up with the Wallace campaign train in Dayton, Ohio, but Wallace managed to avoid him by locking himself in his sleeping compartment. Nevertheless, the reporter managed to get copies of his stories to him. Sprigle chased the Vice Presidential candidate to Bellefontaine, Ohio, to Indianapolis, and finally to Chicago. In Chicago on Oct. 19, Wallace suddenly popped from his compartment, asked Sprigle how to spell his name, scrawled it hurriedly across a two-page typewritten letter, and handed it to Sprigle. The statement to Sprigle, and popped back again. It was the only statement Wallace has ever made on the letters to "Guru," "Modra," and "Zenda."

It was beyond belief. She stood there by the dresser, rigidly, her slim body tense and taut, and looked at the things she held in her hands. She didn't believe it. They weren't there. She wasn't seeing them. She closed her eyes, but when she opened them nothing had changed. The things—were still in Rush's leather case.

RUSH!
She put out a tentative finger and touched the knife, the lock. The lock was twisted now and bent and everyone might not know it for what it was but Ann had opened the lock for too many years not to recognize it immediately. The key was in the lock and she had it. She had it. She stood off in the crash of metal, uneven jagged piece of metal stuck out from the bent keyhole.

But the lock had been locked. The key had been turned. It was still turned. And the lock was bent, so twisted, that it could not have been done after the lock had fallen. That undoubtedly explained why it was here, concealed from prying eyes, curious eyes, eyes that might belong to Sam Blanding... or Ann Forrester.

She closed the case and replaced it in the drawer. She closed the drawer and walked away from it. She walked stiffly into the bathroom and was at once violently sick to her stomach. And before she had managed to regain control of herself, Rush was back.

She tried to get up to face him regarding her from the doorway. He said quietly, "What's the matter, Ann?" She motioned feebly for him to go away but he refused. He stood where he was, making no motion toward her, but saying none.

"I lost my lunch," she mumbled, hating the sour taste in her mouth. "The—I guess the relief was too much for me." It was a lame excuse but it was the best she could manage.

"You've done too much today," he came over, held her close, looked into the mirror at her pale face that was damp now with sweat. If he felt the sudden tightening of her body at his nearness he ignored it and went on talking. "These days of the lake are good for you. Iron out all the kinks. It's all right with Enos and Laurie. They're coming down in a few minutes. Think it's safe to leave them here? Laurie and I still remained at Tophill.

"Oh, Rush!"
"I was only kidding. I told them we were about ready to go." She clung to the porcelain wash-bowl. In the mirror her eyes met his.
"Rush, I'm not sure—do you think—"
"Sure. You'll be fine. You lie

DOROTHY DIX Good Husband Timber

A group of teen-agers ask me how they can tell whether a Boy Friend will make a good husband or not. Alas, girls, that is the $64 question to which no daughter of Eve ever finds out the answer until it is too late to do her any good. Some of the roughest prospects turn out the greatest duds, and many a great lover is a philanderer in disguise.

Any way you look at it there is a lot of guess work about picking out a husband, but, fortunately for women, few men are good enough actors to deceive a girl who really wants to know what she is getting when she gets married. The drunkard, the roue, the gambler, the Weary Willies are branded so that even a blind chick can see what they are. So if she ties up with one of these undesirable, her misery is on her own head. Hence, there is no foolproof recipe for selecting a husband. There are bound to be prospects that don't pan out, but, taking it by and large, every man furnishes his Girl Friend with enough data on the safe side of the altar to tip her off to the kind of a husband he would make.
